In a Democratic Senate, Changes Might Be Minor

toppling the list, but are likely to be constrained by fear of being branded as "big spenders" by Sen. Reagan.

Some, such as Senator Carl Levin, Democrat of Michigan, advocate strengthening the Gramm-Rudman law, which limits the federal deficit, by imposing automatic spending-cutback provisions, partly to force Mr. Reagan to consider increasing taxes to help reduce deficits. Others say deficit targets should be reexamined and that the judiciary should be meeting them, which could torpedo economic growth.

One area in which Democratic control could make a major difference is judicial nominations.

Sen. John Chafee, Republican of Rhode Island, Strom Thurmond, Republican of South Carolina, and Sen. Bruce Bennett, Republican of New Hampshire, are all strong supporters of Senator Kennedy or Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr., Democrat of Delaware.

Mr. Biden could exercise his seniority to take over either judiciary or labor and human resources, has recently indicated a preference for judicial rights in light of the possibility of more Reagan appointees to the Supreme Court.

Senator Kennedy led the fight against confirmation of William H. Rehnquist as chief justice of the United States, but his Judiciary Committee, once it votes, has a single greater obstacle to Mr. Reagan in his final two years.

Two different problems lie posed on the Foreign Relations Committee, where the chairmanship would pass from Richard H. Lugar, Republican of Indiana, to Thalmage Bell, Democrat of Rhode Island.

Mr. Bell has been a vocal proponent of unilateral presidential consent both for and against the president's position. He opposed Mr. Reagan on the issue of portation Secretary Brock Adams finished within 500 votes of each other in the state's open primary. Mr. Gorton has campaigned hard since Congress adjourned, but the race remains one of the closest in the nation between two men generally regarded as moderate.

Washington — Democratic and Republican officials have reported that they had made elaborate preparations to assure that all voters would be counted equally, on Election Day.

Republicans say they fear that Democrats are planning to "vote themselves" and otherwise engage in "vote buying."

Democrats say they expect the Republicans to try to intimidate black and other minority voters in predominantly Democratic precincts.

To counter their fears, both parties have made plans that include local poll watchers, networks of local lawyers, and speedy access to the courts.

Officials of both parties have also made arrangements with judges in all 50 states who can be called on to handle Election Day complaints. Both parties also have agreed to a plan that will enable local lawyers to reach legal experts stationed at the headquarters of both committees.

This work touches particularly well those incumbent lawmakers, who have been able to make their offices utilize all the privileges and immunities of Congress—such as insurance in financial resources, to promote their claims of influence and compassion.

As Joseph Gregory, the executive director of the National Republican Congressional Committee, put it, "They've been able to turn their offices into impregnable fortresses."

As a result, officials in both parties estimate that the balance of power in the House will shift slightly in January, while only slightly. Most experts estimate that the balance of power about and the powers of incumbency have been diminished. They also predict that many issues that would galvanize voters by fostering widespread mood of indignation against the establishment will not generate the kind of opposition candidates that lead to big losses.

Said Tom Hays, executive director of the American Political Science Association:

"If both parties agree that the House will shift slightly, they disregard sharply what that outcome would mean for the future of the 'making history' by defying tradition of the 'six-year' rule." He said that the Democratic Party's primary midway through

If there is any theme to the House races this year, said Mark Johnson, a spokesman for the Democratic campaign committee, it is "the ability to deliver government services—effectiveness, pay-as-you-go."

Few national issues have managed to intrude into these campaigns. The Democrats have tried to make issues of the trade deficit and the slumping farm economy, but they concede that they have ported that they had made elaborate preparations to assure that all votes are counted, and counted equally, on Election Day.

Republicans say they fear that Democrats are planning to "vote tombsone" and otherwise engage in widespread vote fraud, while Democrats say they expect the Republicans to try to intimidate black and other minority voters in pre-local poll watchers, networks of civil lawyers, and speedy access to national experts on election law. FREMANTLE, Australia — Tom Blackaller's USA upset his longtime foe Dennis Conner by a margin of 39 seconds here Sunday, topping Stars and Stripes from first place to third in the second America's Cup challenger series.

With the lead seasawing back and forth, Blackaller emerged from close rounding of the fourth mark to a decisive lead to soar into a tie for the No. 2 spot with Great Britain's White Crusader at 9-4.

 Sharing third place on accumulated points with Conner was Italia (7-6), which defeated Challenge France (2-11) by a staggering 8:43. In the other races in the shifting 4-to-10 knot winds, White Crusadfive points inside of one, as in the first series, an embattled Blackaller, mastering his boat's reflex, took 13 seconds to reach his sixth rail.

USA maintained the wing mark ahead of Stars and Stripes en route to Sunday's 39-second victory.

The victory stretched Blackaller's winning streak to eight and averaged his time down to 13.1 seconds from his initial record. The first of his white-haired opponents, the 35-year-old boat skipper, spent the 13-day break between series by conducting his personal fitness regimen—weight-lifting, swimming, and the boat designed by leading U.S. governmental scientists.

Blackaller said he was "a little out of shape" but "pretty well worked out now." "Somebody's taking a lot of time to get ready," he said. "I think today's race proved that."

Blackaller's time was only 1.5 seconds more than 55 seconds apiece. Blackaller quickly overcame Conner's lead, and the two boats were tied at the halfway 50 seconds mark as the first mark. Conner gained back 11 seconds downwind, but Blackaller's 11-second margin on the second downwind leg.

The boats split around the wing mark, but Conner's lead disappeared into a 55-second Blackaller gap. Conner pulled out all the stops, but he was 11 seconds behind Blackaller on the bottom mark.

Boats racing the first leg of the series bogged the Eagle's syndicate, skipper Rod Davis gave American 11. Heisman Ken Kolka a 12-second lead.

Davis outmaneuvered Kolka for an eight-second starting gap and cut American's 12-second lead to 1.5 seconds by the 35-second mark.

Kolka stormed back to swing the lead to 1.5 seconds at the 125-second mark, but he was 11 seconds back, never to trail again.

The defender hoped, holding the lead, to make a series of moves to ensure a Sunday victory.

Davis outmaneuvered Kolius for an eight-second starting gap and cut America II's 1:01 first-mark lead to a 35-second Eagle advantage on the second run.

Kolius stormed back to swing 1:50 ahead at the second windward mark, never to trail again.

The defender hopefuls, holding their own elimination series, will resume racing Sunday.

THE PAPER: The Life and Death of the New York Herald Tribune
By Richard Kluger. 801 pages. $24.95. Alfred A. Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Of these many newspapers that have folded during the postwar age of television, none has been more widely mourned than the New York Herald Tribune. It died two decades ago, nearly 60 years after it came into being as the New York Herald. Its founder, James Gordon Bennett's Herald, for most of that time it was generally regarded as one of the nation's best and most responsible newspapers, and it published the work of many of the best writers of the time. It was loved and for all, its influence on how Americans' journalism is practiced was incalculable. It was intimately associated with the eastern wing of the Republican Party, that its death occurred on the day that the party was discredited by its participation at the 1964 Republican Convention may not have been entirely coincidental, for the values the Trib represented were no longer in mission within its own bellwether.

It is the history of the rise of the Hearst empire. Tribune is by no means pure gossip or sensationalism. "The Paper" is, therefore by no means solely a book for newspaper junkies. At its core it is a book about the relationships between the press and the public. It is carefully researched, smoothly written, and skillfully organized. Though the conclusions Ring and Klinger draws about how the Herald Tribune came to be what it is today is debatable, and though the book is considerably longer than it needs to be, "The Paper" is serious, thoughtful and engrossing.

It is a book that all those who are "down" were planted with the acquisition of the New York Tribune by Whitelaw Reid in 1872 and presumably with financial support from the late Baron Jay Gould -- and his marriage to a nine year old heiress -- and the acquisition of an immensely wealthy California business-whose millions "turned the paper into a hereditary possession to be sustained as a public duty rather than developed as a profit-making opportunity." Though Kluger's own evidence makes clear that the explanation for the Trib's eventual death is rather more complicated than that, there can be little question that the Reids, from their accession to power in 1872 until their capitulation to John Hay Whitney in 1958, misused the paper inventively.

Ogden Reid, Whitney's son, presided over the merger of the Herald and the Tribune and, during his years as publisher, conducted a general reign during which a number of important improvements were made in the paper; but he was not the driving force behind them as his father was. He was a more conservative than his initiative, and in any case his wife, Helen, was a far more active influence on the paper than he was. Their son, Whitelaw Ogden Reid, was ineffectual leaders of whom one Trib veteran said, "Whitey Reid didn't know how to make any decisions — and his brother didn't know how to make any right decisions."

By the time the Reids sold the Trib to Whitney, in death as well as all assured, Whitney made a valiant effort to seiwet, one that ultimately cost him nearly $40 million. He

Yet Kupper feels that Whitney did not do enough in his concluding paper, he contends that "it cannot be denied that Whitney did more than the Reds before him, that his connection was marked by financial sacrifice." Kupper believes that Whitney should have resigned from the staff of the University of California, "booming up its staff, reaching out into the suburbs, constructing a state-of-the-art printing plant, switching to afternoon publication, and so forth, in order to bring the paper back to life. Forgive me," Kupper suggests, Whitney "could have endowed it as a nonprofit institution, the way he helped to endow the University and New York Hospital and the University of Chicago."

That is a strange idea, especially coming from a writer who 600 pages earlier criticized the Reds for turning the paper into "a hereditary possession to be sustained as a public duty by posterity." Perhaps the change was the result of a plot, hatched as a profit-making opportunity. Perhaps the change was the result of the Trib's literary editor for its last four years, has left sentiment color his judgment.

Thus it is useful to bear in mind that it was the marketplace, as much as the Reds, that killed the Herald Tribune. It was outmaneuvered by the newspaper favored by The New York Times, and it responded too late to the challenge of television; it never could have been a paper for the elite or the masses; it dealt clumsily and inadequately with the unions; and was crippled by two strikes. It was bound to fail, by its readers, but there were not enough of them.

IN a competitive auction it pays to keep an eye on the number of cards held in the opponent's suit. A singleton or void is obviously a plus, but length can also be desirable; it may be possible to infer shortness in partner's hand. An example is the diagrammed deal from a recent duplicate game. North had to assess the value of his hand after his partner had overcalled a three-spade Four hearts, particularly a unfavorable vulnerability, suggested a good hand with good heart suit; North had solid values in the right place and raised to six hearts. He was not afraid of losing the first two spade tricks because his spade length indicated shortness in his partner's hand. In the unlikely case in which South held two spades, West would presumably be void and would not be able to lead the suit.

Manila, Skywalker Surprise Breeders' Cup Winners

By Andrew Boyer
ARCADIA, California — In a state of confusion or making the reputation of the thoroughbred, Skywalker's Breeders' Cup had been a low.

Dancing Brave had been a one of Europe's greatest horses of all time, but he was trounced by the U.S. 3-year-old Manila in the Breeders' Cup Turf before a crowd of 69,153 at Santa Anita Racetrack. Turkoman and Precious had been considered this nation's dominant racehorses all year, but they were trounced by the lightly regarded Skywalker in the $3 million Breeders' Cup Classic.

Even the seemingly invincible Groovy finished out of the money behind the victor in the Sprint. The only horse who emerged with a high reputation intact was Lady's Secret, who won the Distaff and almost certainly looked up the horse-of-the-year title.

The other winners on a $10 million day of championship racing were the 2-year-old colts Europe and Brave Raj and the European filly Last Tycoon.

Of all the results, the defeat of Lady's Secret is the one that will be most remembered, especially by one man who wagered $185,000.

to win and by all of England, which had come from the nation's past and had followed his every move with rapt interest.

At no stage of the $3 million Turf did he resemble the colt who was the last of his career starts in spectacular fashion.

Jockey Pat Eddy got Dancing Brave into decent racing position as the California mare Estrupade set a slow early pace. Dancing Brave second pulled to make a move on the stretch turn, but came up empty.

Instead, it was Estrupade's stablemate, Theatrical, who made the challenge outside the leader, while Manila saved ground behind them on the turn. In midstretch, Theatrical looked like a winner, for Manila had no running room on the rail and had to alter his course to angle out.

Shortly after he did, José Santos, aboard Manila, dropped his whip.

If Manila was confirming his standing as the best American turf horse, it was his seventh victory in a row — Skywalker is apt to be remembered as the third straight undisputed horse who has managed to win the world's richest race.

He had never been considered one of the best horses in California; his last victory came at Longanes Race Track near Seattle.

Lieke Wild Again and Proud Truth in the last two years, Skywalker benefited from optimal racing luck, much of it owing to the work of his illustrious jockey, Laffie Pincay Jr.

Skywalker was part of a tightly bunched four-horse pack that vied for the lead in the Classic. He was in front on the rail, slipping the first half-mile in 46 seconds, while Precious stalked him on the rail and Skywalker raced just outside of Precious. "I had him crapped in there," Pincay said, "and I didn't want to let him out. He won't be a jockey. Gary Stevens had nowhere to go with Precious. As he dropped back, Pincay guided Skywalker to the lead. "I opened a couple lengths and I knew it was going to be very tough for Precious to come back again."

Now Skywalker's worry was Turkoman. The stretch-runner had been trailing by as many as 15 lengths as his custom, and when he launched his rally he had to move seven wide around the turn.

Nobody had been able to win on the dirt all day by rallying on the outside, and Turkoman couldn't either. His furious rally through the stretch left 14 lengths short, costing him the horse-of-the-year title and the chance to be recognized as a great champion. In retrospect, he had plenty of company Saturday.
